

Sensory Details Madlibs: The Story

As the boy and girl stepped gingerly into the haunted house, they couldn't help but notice the overwhelming smell of 1. _____. A witch leaped out from behind the door. Her cackle sounded like a 2. _____. The kids screamed and rushed into the next room. An eerily lit kitchen met their eyes. There was a bowl full of strange food on the table. "Taste if you dare," read a small sign next to it. It looked like 3. _____. The girl tried it first. "It tastes just like 4. _____," she said. The boy tried it next. "No, it's more like 5. _____," he argued. They continued to the next room. Something brushed up against them as they walked in. "AAAARRRGH," they yelled. It felt like 6. _____. It didn't smell so good either. They held their noses to keep the smell of 7. _____ away. They rushed into the hall, bumped into some other kids, and ran through another doorway. Everything went dark. Something brushed against them. It felt like 8. _____. They screamed and headed up a staircase on their left. As they stepped into a musty attic, one flickering light shone on the dust in the air. Two ghosts came out from behind an old chair, holding bowls of candy. "Take one if you dare," said the ghosts. The boy and girl looked at each other. "OK," said the boy and put one in his mouth. "Hmmm, tastes like 9. _____," he said. The girl took one too. "Not mine," she said. "Mine tastes like 10. _____." They ran back downstairs and out the door. "That's enough haunted house for me!" said the boy. They ran down the street, not looking back.

